

At a rented room in the Cambridge Maryland, a young bible crying Preacher's son meets a rich, pretty river girl who is living with her mother and her younger brother, she has lived in Cambridge all of her life, the river girl is more fascinating to him than the church going girls he meets at his church camp meetings.

He finds her pleasingly insensitive as she walks around Cambridge creek wearing only a sundress.

one day he sees her with crab cakes and cherry wine under her mother's cherry tree And despite the fact that his mother intensely disapproves of her and flatly refuses to ask her to the church camp meetings the young bible crying Preacher's son walks up to her and ask her if he can be with her that night, she look up and said "sure I'll leave my bedroom window"

That night as he looked thought her bedroom window he saw his father on his knees in front of his river girl and with his big black bible but he was not praying for her, when she saw him she said "tell you mother hello".

Barry Wyatt Jr.